Comments: While most medical assistants seek voluntary certification, no state requires medical assistants to be licensed. Formal medical assisting programs typically lead to either a certificate or a diploma. Medical assistants are not required by law to hold licensure or certification. Medical assisting is not typically a state-licensed/certified profession. The only exception to this includes medical assistants who perform specific duties, such as phlebotomy or x-rays, as state laws may require specific training and certification in these areas. Student applications are reviewed on a case-by-case basis.
